PROFESSIONAL PROFILE

Dr. Muhammad Arif Rizwan holds a DVM (Gold Medalist, 2014) and an MPhil in Clinical Medicine (2016) from UVAS Lahore. He earned his PhD at the Wuhan Institute of Virology, University of Chinese Academy of Sciences, China, as an ANSO Scholar. His doctoral research used phylogenetics, multi-omics, and genomic surveillance to investigate influenza A virus evolution and pharyngeal microbiome disruption under changing epidemiological pressures.

His research is grounded in the One Health framework, with a focus on respiratory pathogen genomics, zoonotic surveillance, and mucosal ecosystem dynamics. His work highlights the value of integrated viral-bacterial surveillance for post-pandemic outbreak preparedness and antimicrobial stewardship. He has published in journals including npj Biofilms and Microbiomes, Viruses, and Journal of Medical Virology.

He began his academic career as a Lecturer in Clinical Medicine before joining the Punjab Livestock & Dairy Development Department as a Veterinary Officer through the Punjab Public Service Commission (PPSC). He later joined CUVAS, where he teaches and conducts research at the intersection of epidemiology, genomic surveillance, and public health. As Vice President of the One Health Club CUVAS, he contributes to cross-sectoral disease surveillance capacity and the translation of pathogen genomic intelligence into public health policy in Pakistan.
